Scale of three Feet.

THIS double Plow was invented in January, 1732-3. It plows our stony stiff Grounds in Hertfordshire very well, is made for the Wheel Carriage, and plows both stitch and broad Lands; it turns 21 Inches of Ground, and breaks it in two at the same time, which no single one does, whose largest sort turns only 13 Inches: It plows above one third of Ground more in a Day than the single one, and that with only 4, 5, or 6 Horses: It works steadier than the common Plows, which are apt to jump out in stony Ground and miss a great deal: It is easier for the Plow-man to hold, and but little heavier to turn at the Lands end; but for its further Uses and Advantages, see the new Book of Husbandry, first publish'd on the 11th Day of May 1733, Entitled, Chiltern and Vale Farming Explained; truly necessary for all Landlords and Tenants of Plowed Grass and Wood Grounds. Containing the Nature and Improvement of the four Clays, four Loams, four Gravels, four Chalks, and three Sands. Of the Oak, shewing seven several ways to improve it. Three Ways to extract the Sap out of Beech for its longer duration. How the Wood of the Black Cherry Tree counterfeits that of Mahogany. Of the Ash, Lime, Firr, Elm, Witch Elm, Sycamore, Hazel, Wall Nut, White Elder, Sweet and Horse Chesnut, with the several Aquaticks. Of Wheat and other Grains. Remarks on a late Author's Writings on Artificial Grasses. On Plowing in general. Also of the new Double Plow and eight other sorts. Of Salt and other Manures. Of Sowing in general. Of Weeds in general, and their Cures. To keep the Slug, Fly, and Caterpillar from the Turnep. A most excellent new Liquor to steep Grain in for sowing. To know good from bad Seeds. To propagate Grain in the North. Of Horse-houghing, its Advantages and Disadvantages. Of the Stones in the common Fields. Of Blights in general, and many other things never before publish'd. By William Ellis, Author of The Practical Farmer, of Little Gaddesden, near Hempstead in Hertfordshire.
